UNH Strengthens Commitment to Civil Discourse Lab

The University of New Hampshire solidified its support of the Lab with a tenure line beginning Fall 2022 to maintain and develop curriculum around dialogue, deliberation, collaboration, and organizational communication, as well as develop research in these areas. With two full-time professors focusing on research and teaching in areas that support communication promoting civil discourse, the Lab is in a position to develop sustainable programming within the Department of Communication, with partners across the university, and throughout New Hampshire. New initiatives in the works include certificated training through the UNH Professional Development program, and online training in conflict and communication, dialogue and diversity, collaboration, facilitating difficult conversations, civil discourse fields of practice, and much more.

Given the present political context that is often hostile towards academic freedom, quick to censure topics that deserve nuance (i.e., “critical race theory”), and skeptical of science, there is an imperative for constructive communication across differences. This commitment to the Lab is particularly meaningful for UNH and the greater community. The additional tenure line faculty position ensures programming bringing continuity to curricula and longevity to research projects. The position is especially welcome because Professor Lydia Reinig concluded her three-year position (Spring 2022) as a Postdoctoral Research and Teaching Associate. The College of Liberal Arts and the Department of Communication are committed to learning opportunities that “keep the conversation going.”

With Enthusiasm! Jen & Renée,
Co-Directors, Civil Discourse Lab, Department of Communication

The mission of the Civil Discourse Lab is to strengthen the ability of students and community members to conduct meaningful conversations, collaborate, and weigh decisions around sometimes difficult but important topics to a civil society through research, experiential learning, and praxis.

Engaging The NH Community: Signature Programming & Curriculum

The Civil Discourse Lab produced two signature programs embedded in upper-division courses that function as co-curricular, experiential learning. Students engaged in coursework that simultaneously prepares for and executes a public dialogue/deliberation event that happens outside of the classroom with the broader university and/or public.

Voting Rights and Responsibilities (Fall)

Professor Borda’s CMN 785 Communication and Deliberation Across Differences (Fall 2021) focused on the art of rhetoric in a civic context.

Students considered the role of storytelling; the saliency of facts, values, and rhetorical strategies; their agency as citizens; as well as the role of experts, the media, and the fourth estate in a functioning democracy.

Through collectively examining the question “Who Has the Right to Vote and Whose Vote Matters in the United States?” students undertook research on issue framing, exercised their analytical perspectives, and sharpened their critical awareness of current public controversies. In the second half of the semester, students worked together to design the issue guide “How Should We Protect Our Free and Fair Elections?” and facilitated a public forum for more than 30 participants from UNH and surrounding communities.

Stories and Voices: Engaging Water (Spring)

Professor Heath’s CMN 662 Public Dialogue and Deliberation (Spring 2022) produced Stories and Voices: An Interactive Public Dialogue Engaging Water. The public dialogue was planned, designed, and implemented by students and was sponsored by the Global Racial and Social Inequality Lab. The purpose of the event was to help participants examine what we know about water, recognize the complex web of interests, identify overlapping values, and connect to water and to each other. The program hosted 88 participants and turned toward Indigenous expertise to contextualize water as part of historical and cultural heritage.
Research in Progress

“Rethinking Polarization: Discursive Opening and the Possibility for Sustaining Dialogue”

Data gleaned from transcriptions of discussions that took place in Fall 2019 in a public dialogue designed to discuss four freedoms (from, of, for, and to) point to evidence that students with little communication training, representing the campus political spectrum (avowed democratic socialists to avowed conservatives), demonstrated not only the willingness but the capacity to engage across ideological stances. Without prompting, students repeatedly pivoted conversations away from performative ideological talking points to genuine and sincere questioning of one another as they tackled topics ranging from immigration to gun regulation. The findings suggest when given the conditions for dialogue, such as ground rules and nonpartisan facilitators, constructive conversation ensues.

Engaging Water with Attention to Indigenous Knowledge

(Analysis in Progress)

Transcription data were collected from the Stories and Voices public discussion on values held about water in the Seacoast region. Of the eleven round table discussions, seven groups had the opportunity to learn from local Indigenous participants. The program also featured formal input from Paul Pouliot, Head Male Speaker of the Cowasuck Band of the Penacook-Abenaki Peoples and featured content narrated by Anne Jennison, an Indigenous storyteller. Our research question compares conversations that included the local knowledge of Indigenous persons in the discussions versus those who did not have the benefit of this diverse perspective represented that evening. We are curious about representation and how different types of knowledge affect understandings of the topic. Data are presently being transcribed by CDL Fellows.

Invited Talks: Highlights

“How to Have Difficult Conversations”

UNH Alumni Connection Webinar

The ability to navigate tough conversations is an important skill in your work, community, and personal life. Being able to do it well is difficult, and sometimes we’d rather ignore these conversations altogether. During this webinar, Professors Borda and Heath discussed rethinking civility, talked about why it's important to have challenging discussions and provided ideas to have meaningful conversations in your life. Civil Discourse Lab leaders also discussed the results of a recent Alumni impact study, including what our alumni are saying about the importance of such skills both in the workplace and in their personal lives.

“Listening Across Diverse Perspectives” (Video Presentation)

The Global Listening Centre (GLC) Festival hosted its first virtual conference collaborating with Ball State University. Professor Heath presented “Listening Across Diverse Perspectives.” Our students featured proudly toward the latter part of the video (25-minute mark). The video was created by student Marco Calvanese ('22). The Global Listening Centre is an International Consortium of scholars across disciplines advancing the important work of listening toward a better world.

“Creating a Culture of Civil Discourse”

The College of Liberal Arts Dean, Michele Dillon, and Provost Wayne Jones, launched an initiative to foster civil discourse campus-wide. The program began by convening the President’s Council, who participated in a two-hour workshop devoted to brainstorming about civil discourse and other forms of free speech and democratic communication on campus. CDL and COLA are committed to supporting a series of campus discussions that contribute to a culture of civil discourse at all levels of leadership and with all campus partners, that can be tailored toward specific faculty, staff, and student groups. If your department or organization would like to organize training on topics related to civil discourse, such as constructive conflict, dialogue and difference, and setting the conditions for difficult discussions, please contact us at civil.discourse@unh.edu.
Enhancing Student Success

An Invitation to the Biden School of Public Policy

The Civil Discourse Lab faculty were invited twice in the 2021-22 academic year to participate as advisors and participants in the SNF Ithaca Initiative. Hosted by the Joseph R. Biden School of Public Policy at the University of Delaware, the Initiative, funded by the Stavros Niarchos Foundation, aims to support civil discourse curricula in academia towards better policy making. In October, Professor Heath participated in a round table discussion with other national civil discourse leaders. In the spring, four students accompanied her to Delaware to participate in two full-day workshops facilitating discussions on enhancing civil discourse on their respective campuses. University of New Hampshire was one of twenty schools to participate nation-wide in this inaugural event.

Forthcoming

Lab faculty envision a 2-credit dialogue lab section to complement (willing) courses that would benefit from facilitated discussions navigating difficult topics. The program would move future training to a curricular model that serves the university across disciplines.

New Leadership

For the 2022-23 academic year, we welcome a new student Assistant Program Director (APD), Alexa Bobinski, ’23, who will be helping to track student volunteer and training hours and assist in research projects. Additionally, Ross Blauvelt, ’23, will serve as a CDL fellow assisting on programming and marketing. New fellows, Celia Bajrami and Hayleyann Gifford, will work on other CDL-related projects.
The Civil Discourse Lab is generously supported by contributions from the following organizations: UNH Responsible Governance and Sustainable Citizen Project funded the three-year Post doctoral Research and Teaching Associate position that ended May 2022. The UNH College of Liberal Arts and the COLA Dean’s Unrestricted Gift Fund helps support student fellowships and research projects. The UNH Global Racial and Social Inequality Lab granted stipends to facilitate Indigenous participation in our Stories and Voices program. An annual donation from Andy Coville (’82), CEO of Brodeur Partners, supports programming costs for signature public events and helps fund our Assistant Program Director. The Department of Communication at the University of New Hampshire provides administrative and other in-kind support for student programs. The Department supports the CDL directors to manage the Lab as part of their service. CDL directors were not paid for their administrative or student work.

In addition to funding, the Lab’s work was supported by various UNH and community partners. Thank you to Denise and Paul Pouliot of the Cowasuck Band of the Abenaki-Penacook Peoples, Kathleen Blake, Anne Jennison, Kathy Duderstadt, and Jennifer Brewer who all played key roles in the planning of Stories and Voices: An Interactive Dialogue Engaging Water.
